There are several limitations to this study. First, the study was conducted in a single country, which may limit the generalizability of the findings. Second, the study used a self-reported measure of ethical behavior, which may be subject to social desirability bias.

Future research should investigate the relationship between ethical behavior and organizational performance in a multi-national context. Additionally, it would be beneficial to explore the role of organizational culture in shaping ethical behavior.

In conclusion, this study highlights the importance of ethical behavior in the business world. By understanding the factors that influence ethical behavior, organizations can create a more ethical and sustainable business environment.

The authors would like to thank the participants who took part in this study. We also would like to thank the reviewers for their helpful comments and suggestions.
